ministry to teens/children

Ministry to children and teens is a privilege. Both groups can be very responsive and display loyalty and love to one who shows genuine interest. Unfortunately over the past several years, the climate for ministry has changed in America. There have been individuals who have taken advantage of these relationships and exploited children and teens. In this climate, it is very important to "watch your life closely" (1 Timothy 4:16).

This may mean examining the way you relate to individuals and taking care to communicate love and care in ways that are above reproach, including internet and social media. Activities that could be misunderstood or viewed as a stumbling block should be eliminated. It also means that your major focus among teens should be students of your gender. We are never to be alone with a minor of the opposite sex, in order to avoid misunderstandings.

You do not have to do something wrong – only be accused of it – to have your ministry and efforts made useless. This is hopefully a warning that will never apply in your ministry, but you lessen the chances if you are prepared and take steps to prevent misunderstandings.

Recognizing that in the course of ministry there will arise normal and reasonable expenses, these expenses will be reimbursable in the following contexts:

- In meeting with teens or children where there is an expense such as refreshments or lunch.
- In cases when teaching materials and ministry supplies are needed and are not available through resources on-hand.
- In situations where there are fees that children or teens are expected to pay.

In these cases, it is necessary to document your expense. GET A RECEIPT and mark who/what it was for on the receipt. In all cases where there is expense involved, remember that this is a privilege, a provision that Parma Heights Baptist Church has made to further ministry and any expenses involved should be justifiable in that light.

dress guidelines

For the term of the internship, you will be looked at as a person in a position of leadership. It is therefore important to avoid any questionable appearances. This means:

- In services on Sunday, wear appropriate clothes for the ministry you will be involved with.
- When working in the office, wear appropriate attire for the day's activities.
- When with teens and children (participating in activities), dress modestly and casual, always clean and covered.
